Since goals are typically assessed for both the fall and spring semesters, the assessment committee generally makes a short presentation of findings at the May departmental meeting.	We are refraining on making changes to goals/learning objectives until we have completed a full round of assessment (6 goals), though we anticipate a robust discussion at that time. We have improved the assessment process for AY23-24 by asking faculty scorers to also submit a short survey indicating any learning objectives that they found particularly difficult to assess or anything that they were seeing in artifacts that would seem to be relevant to the goal under assessment, but which did not have a stated learning objective.	2019

Assessment Committee Report 2022-2023

In the 2022-2023 school year, the Assessment Committee—Bartholomew Brinkman, Alexander Hartwiger, Lisa Eck, and Rachel Trousdale (chair)—were finally able to complete a full round of assessment after several years of interruptions (work-to-rule; the pandemic; technological challenges), building on work begun in the spring of 2022. I am very grateful to the committee members for their thoughtful work this year.

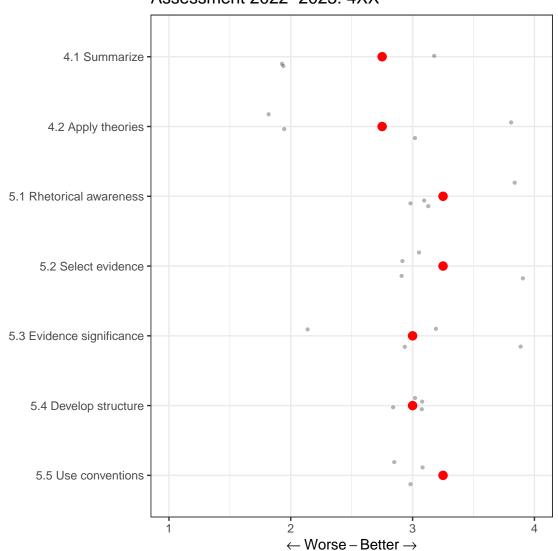

We collected a total of 78 responses during the fall and spring rounds of assessment, and we are pleased to report that the data at least preliminarily suggest that our classes are doing what they are supposed to. This year's data collection focused on Goals 4 and 5, which deal with theoretical and literary-critical research (Goal 4) and "advanced communication skills" (Goal 5). For both goals, students scored slightly but consistently higher as they progressed through 200-, 300-, and finally 400-level classes. Our numbers are, from a statistical standpoint, small, so we are wary of claiming too much certainty, but it does appear that students actually learn what we think we're teaching in these area.

Action items coming out of this round of assessment are twofold. First, as we agreed as a department during the May retreat, it might be helpful for the department to hold a discussion of our expectations for how theory and criticism are used — or not — in 200- and 300-level classes. Students are clearly learning skills for theoretical and critical research in ENGL 204 and applying them in ENGL 422, but the reinforcement of those skills at the 300 level seems to be somewhat inconsistent. It seems worth discussing as a department whether we want to ask instructors to make consistent use of criticism and/or theory at the 300 level, and if so, how much guidance we want to give about that process.

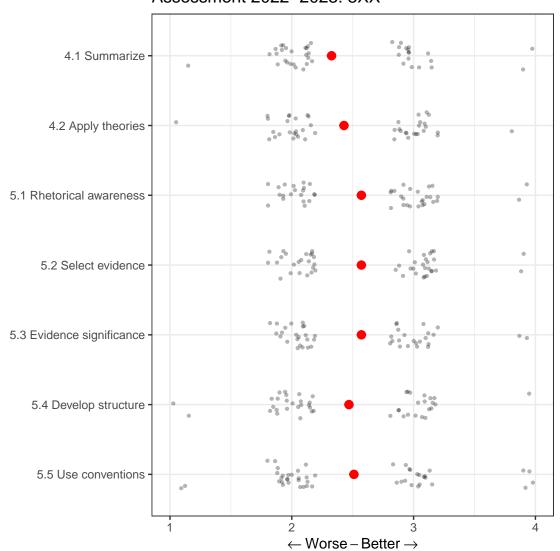

Second, some of the objectives turn out to be unclear to faculty doing the assessment process. Particular concern was raised about the difference between "theory" and "criticism," and the objective that students be able to summarize a "range" of theories. We may need to revise the objectives to clarify what an individual student artifact might demonstrate—we want students to be able to summarize a range of theories, but that doesn't mean that each paper needs to do so. This might be addressed by further editing the always-evolving Goals and Objectives, or by writing a companion document clarifying the kinds of evidence we look for in student work.

One thing to note going forward is that our assessment system really only works when we have a "before" and "after" shot in each semester. This means that participation by the instructors of ENGL 204 and ENGL 422 is really essential to the process. Assessment participation is voluntary for all faculty—as it has to be, since it is not part of the contract. But we need to make it clear to faculty teaching those courses how valuable their input is, and how easy the process.

Respectfully submitted, Rachel Trousdale Assessment 2022-2023: 4XX
